Many of our clients are located in China, and we have to prove their identity to the customs to import goods into their country. Unfortunately, most of the clients we work with are brand new and do not have any documents showing their identity. That is where document scanners come in: the best place to use a document scanner is for scanning your Chinese identity card or driver's license. By scanning it, you are sure of its authenticity and your receiving customs will be so much more easy to understand. For more information about our document scanning services, check out the following links: Location Scanning Service in China RFID Tag Scanning Service in China Document Scanning Service in China More About China Document Scanning The relationship between technology and the frontier of scanning technology has been growing rapidly in recent years. In the past, document scanners mainly played a role in the field of law enforcement and in information collection, but now the development of these techniques has transformed many other industries. Not only has scanning been used in the forensic market to detect and identify the cross-reference of information, as well as the joint-ing between websites and others, but it is also being used to check the origin of print and information, to identify counterfeit document, to calculate surface depth, to identify lost or stolen property, and so on. In 2000, there were already 100 million office scanners in use in the market and 99% were built-in scanners, whereas in 2006, this market figure reached 10 billion units. According to the International Data Group's prediction, the number of office scanners will continue to increase at a rate of 6.7% annually and already, the majority of business enterprises have implemented scanning systems. It is true that Chinese enterprises are not excessively following the trend of scanning. For China, the scanning market is a kind of electronic and digital product and print market and is growing rapidly. In recent years, enterprise-level manufacturers have gradually abandoned the use of printed identity cards to take advantage of the convenience and attributes of the integrated scanning systems. In most cases, the driver's licenses and business cards of the employees will be sent directly to the employee's computer terminal, so that the employee can manage them all through the control system of the company. The market for the integrated document scanner is also growing rapidly. Through integration, the operator can not only scan and share the related information, but also bring into the workplace several other functions such as word
