Dempsey, on the right, is a big part of the reason why the USMNT's midfield has been so potent so far. One of the key ways FIFA has been able to achieve this is in the player animations. Player models have been "zoomed-in" on faces, which "allows for more details and more personality," according to NPC Alejandro Romano. "You have a whole range of animations inside each player," he says. "It is a great attribute to each character in the game. You have the center-mids, you have the wide-mids, you have the full-backs. You have a little bit of animation for each different style of play and you can pick the style of play you want to have during the match." When it comes to in-game tactical decisions, Adrian Batistuta told us that the team behind the scenes are continuously evaluating player performance as they progress in a match. Using a data-driven approach means they can use "all the information" they've gathered to evaluate a player, he said. "One thing you can see as a gamer is, where is he excelling in a match? If a player is producing one or two assists a match, that doesn't mean a lot in the game. But if he's providing other players with assists, giving them free-kicks and telling you to stay in front of them... what has he done that is more valuable for the team? That's something the game now has the data to show you." Batistuta also shared details on how AI logic works in the game. "I think the AI is really the heart of this game," he said. "The engine [used to make the game] is huge, and we have done a lot of work with the programmers so it can be humanized. For example, we have a lot of data on how the players are using their energy in a game. So when you go and start a match, you see how your team was in previous matches and you start off playing a certain way based on that. "The engine is intelligent enough that it knows that, for example, if you have a player like Tim [Howard], who is a bit more aggressive, he can be getting a yellow card 10 times in a game and you're

Posted by Matt on 4/2/2013 2:47:00 PM Well, i am sad because i was expecting to enjoy this game. I bought Fifa 15 and worked very hard to reach the best player in the world so i thought i will go on the same with Fifa 16. I am so disappointed to learn that my career will never be free. I will not be able to play it anymore. One of the reason is that i know my dream might never be fulfilled because of EA's subscription policy and the new ones i would have to buy and the new Subscriber's only tips will not be available to free. And also, i am a very simple guy, i just want to play it, have fun, play long hours, achieve my dream. I do not play Sim or anything like that. Fifa is my dream. For me, it is like a piece of heaven. Every time i saw Fifa in the past, i was so excited. But i did not know about this policy of EA at all until last week when they announced that FIFA 15 will no longer be able to do anything free. i am so frustrated. If Fifa 16 will still be free, i will gladly get it. Posted by Agent 99 on 4/2/2013 4:01:00 PM I have always liked the FUT mode of games. You build the team you want, select from any position in the world etc...This is the closest feature FIFA has had that would have made it feel and play like playing a sport like soccer and you could customize to your hearts content unlike PES. However they

EA SPORTS FIFA 18 features the most authentic football experience featuring improved connections with the pitch and stadium atmospheres as well as a new off the ball engine and intelligent player movement. The present invention relates to an external exposure apparatus used for manufacture of a color filter for a liquid crystal display. A process of manufacturing a color filter is performed by forming a resist by applying a resist material to a substrate having a color pattern formed thereon, exposing the resist material by means of a predetermined mask pattern, and then performing a development process. In recent years, as the screen of a display for a portable device, such as a mobile phone and a car navigation system, has become larger, a pattern forming method of exposing a resist by use of a photomask having a large number of pattern holes corresponding to a number of pixel for displaying a larger image has been used. In addition, a step of aligning an exposure surface of the photomask with the surface of the substrate with high accuracy has been required. For this purpose, a photomask on which the pattern holes are formed along the outer periphery of a chip is used. However, when the pattern holes are formed on the outer periphery of a chip, the pattern holes are formed only on the outer periphery of the chip. Therefore, when a large pattern, such as a color pattern for a liquid crystal display, is formed on the chip, an area for forming the pattern holes increases and thus, the area of the chip becomes large. For example, it is assumed that a color filter for a black matrix of a liquid crystal display has the same size as that of a basic color filter with four kinds of patterns (R, G, B, and W) in order to increase the black level. In this case, as shown in FIG. 19, a black matrix BM is formed on the display region of a TFT substrate 12, and a pattern hole for a color filter CF is formed on an image display region 16. Since the black matrix
