Enlarge this image toggle caption Hulton Archive/Getty Images Hulton Archive/Getty Images The official White House Twitter account shared a video Wednesday that highlighted American accomplishments and history while mentioning a study that concluded whites in the United States are now America's least-powerful racial group. In the video, first shared by President Trump's daughter-in-law Lara Trump, Trump was shown saying, "This is a pivotal moment in American history." Lara Trump's tweet says that the video, which includes clips of the president, is "America's 100th birthday celebration," which of course is true. What was perhaps more controversial was her tweet that followed it: "White America, you are the least powerful racial group in America today, a fact." Many, including the president himself, were quick to question this view and to criticize Trump's tweet, especially as there are some legitimate reasons to question whether whites are still the dominant racial group in the United States. In the video, titled "America's Best and Brightest," Trump is seen speaking at length about how minorities and women made up for America's racial "blind spots," and how having the first black president has boosted his office's image. He also recites a few lines from
