HOT TOPICS: Senate OKs Google cancer study By JOYCE RANSOM Associated Press Posted: 03/01/2014 11:00:47 AM CST Updated: 03/01/2014 06:59:52 PM CST Click photo to enlarge Sen. Ben Nelson, R-Neb., chairman of the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee, walks off after a press conference with the two chairmen of the health committee, Sens. Mike Enzi, R-Wyo., left, and Ron Wyden, D-Ore., on Thursday, March 7, 2013, in Washington. The lawmakers will appear Thursday at the first hearing on the committee's new health-reform bill. WASHINGTON—The Senate passed bipartisan legislation Thursday to expand government funding for a $4.9 million study of the genetic causes of cancers and to assist families with rare genetic diseases. The 478-page bill, approved by the Senate health committee on a 21-8 vote, was pushed through by Republicans who took control of the chamber after the election of Barack Obama and Democrats who support the research and want to assure patients that their concerns about proposed policy changes won't be dismissed by the White House. "We're trying to make sure that families are getting the best care they can," said Sen. Mike Enzi, R-Wyo. The National Cancer Institute study would allow a scientist to collaborate with two institutions that specialize in pediatric cancer research and set out to determine which cancers are caused by mistakes in the genes and which are not. The agency estimates that 70 percent of all cancers have identifiable genetic origins. Advertisement The bill sets aside $3 million a year for the study for four years, starting in the year 2017. Ranking member Michael Enzi, of Wyoming, acknowledged that while the University of Utah and Georgetown University Medical Center were still ramping up to accomplish the study, it was possible Congress could launch a similar study next year. The bill would expand the scope of the federal breast and ovarian cancer research study that has been going on at Georgetown, Enzi said. The study will be conducted by a scientist from Georgetown, who will analyze the DNA of breast or ovarian cancer patients to discover potential mistakes in their genes. While the study is expected to last 18 months, it could take longer to determine the results. Sixty percent of the money would be spent

Q: Is there any evidence the Civil War was not fought to determine the outcome of the American system of government? I'm not asking for an answer. I'm asking for evidence, either in text or film. A: The answer is in the text. While the Emancipation Proclamation was issued on January 1, 1863, it was signed on January 1, 1862, and taken effect on March 8, 1862. The war was not fought to determine the outcome of the American system of government. A: If you are looking for some contemporaneous accounts of the war, this may help you. The Civil War - In just six months, a nation was torn apart and transformed forever John Trowbridge's book "The South And The Turf: A War Notebook" (1862) is a book of photographs taken by an American Civil War photographer, documenting the Confederate home front. For example, see that section beginning on page 16, where he describes the battles of Bull Run and Shiloh. Naval Engagements In The War More than a year and a half after the fall of Fort Sumter the North and South were still tied together by a network of railways. There was no break in this union until the sea. It was only then that the prosperity and security of the Union were endangered. The first naval engagement of the war was the Battle of Hampton Roads. The battle was fought on March 9, 1862, and the Union forces were routed. Surprised and attacked at the same time, the navy suffered a defeat without striking a blow. The only result was the saving of the Union. The action caused tremendous excitement in the North, which was stung into action by the news of the defeat. The Confederate commander, General John C. Fremont, had assumed command of the Union navy after the defeat of the two largest of the Federal ironclads at the first battle of Hampton Roads. Consequently, the United States government tried to save face by attacking at a later date. It was March 12, 1862, when a Confederate fleet of twenty-one warships, commanded by Rear Admiral Franklin Buchanan, drove another fleet, which consisted of seven wooden vessels, one ironclad, and one schooner, under the
