A three-dimensional self-contained, nondestructive sculpture, it's one of the few artists' sculptures on earth. Clowes works by popping up in his paintings. Instead of brushing the surface of a canvas with an accumulation of tiny dots or dabbing it with paint, he lays a patchwork of paint on the surface of the canvas. Then, as time passes, certain parts of the painting begin to shrivel up, pucker, or retract. While living in Abiquiu, New Mexico, for six months in 2012, Clowes began to experiment with this idea. His first series of "plants" sprang up out of the paint as the canvas shrank. The shapes were made of a series of folds and ridges: deep creases in the canvas traced the forms of a rose, a dandelion, a pinecone, and other shapes we recognize as organic. Like living plants, they had their own shape, but their outer surface was not knotted or hairy, nor made of pruney-cut-tree-trunks. Their faces were carved smooth.Q: Blur effect on an ImageView I have a blur effect like this
